CENTRAL DIVISION

JAGER PRO, INC.

PLAINTIFF

v.

No. 4:19-cv-107-DPM

BULL CREEK WELDING AND FABRICATION, INC.

DEFENDANT

ORDER

The parties have asked the Court to modify its definition of the person having ordinary skill in the art involved in this case. Doc. 50. This is a fact question. Graham v. John Deere Company of Kansas City, 383 U.S. 1, 17 (1966). The record is thin, but the parties agree on what the definition should be. The motion is therefore granted as modified. Here's the new definition:

A person of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention would have at least a bachelor's degree in mechanical, industrial, or civil engineering. She would also have some experience dealing with wireless communications systems and monitoring devices—such as digital, infrared, low-light, and motion-sensing cameras.

So Ordered.
